Dear Department of Ecology,

As you know, polluted runoff from our roads, parking lots, and other hardened surfaces is the numbers one water pollution problem in Washington State. Scientists and other experts have also identified it as the most pressing threat that must be addressed if we are to restore Puget Sound. The runoff is responsible for destroying salmon runs, shutting down commercial shellfish beds, flooding, and costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars in added storm water management costs. Fortunately, there are new „green building" techniques referred to as „Low Impact Development" that can prevent these problems.

As the Department of Ecology updates the Municipal Stormwater General Permits, I urge you to require developers to utilize LID techniques wherever feasible. These „green building" techniques, such as the use of „rain gardens", pervious pavement, and retention of vegetation and native soils are the most effective way to reduce toxic runoff into Puget Sound and other bodies of water around the state.

New permits should:

- Contain strong, scientifically based standards for LID.
- Reduce loopholes for developers, promoting LID when it is feasible.
- Support a watershed based approach in which we promote the protection of forested areas and reduce the amount of pavement where possible.

Thank you for this opportunity to comment. I look forward to your response and future updates.
