1. Plan the program out well before any implementation, don't threaten un justly.
 2. Set standards, previous use of USDA standards should protect lagoon owners from major changes.
 3. Test for a significant problem, make sure a problem truly exists before spending state funds and causing concern in the CAFO industries.
 4. Test each individual site to confirm a problem exist before requiring any expenses by lagoon owners.
 5. Make sure any changes don't make any problem worse.
 6. Don't devise a program that will destroy and industry due to excessive expenses.
 7. Establish standards by the number of cattle on feed.
 8. Don't create a situation as occurred in the Colorado mine waste disaster.
- And
9. The first emphasis should be to punish those very large CAFO operations that knowingly and purposefully violate current regulations
